

WORD OF THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Dear Readers,

we present to you the second issue of the scientific journal “Society and Politics” in 2021.

Interdisciplinarity in the approach to the topic is for us legal science, which is a proven method, method, method of political science, pedagogical science and health science from health and economics. In current documentation, suppliers of theoretical and practical, scientific expertise on current documentation, Europe, and the world. The media reports on communication, an aging population, and the unstable situation of Europe in eastern Ukraine. For many years, we have also been informed about the underfunding of health services, as well as the difficulties related to the work of seasonal workers. The subjects became an anti-polymer action.

The number of Tadeusz Bartoś article analyzed the difficulties in solving solutions in locations, and even asks the question whether there is still democracy in Poland. Source for the reason for the situation in which there was the process of introducing differentiation in the post-domination times. At the same time, it outlines a diagnosis that could lead to a change.

In his article, Piotr Gierek takes up an extremely important topic concerning counteracting the social exclusion of seniors. By analyzing the social roles played by seniors and studying the literature, the author aims to show activities aimed at social activation of older people in order to improve their quality of life.

The work of Liudmyla Kryvachuk, which undertook an analysis of international models of the functioning of the Ombudsman for Children, with particular emphasis on the practice of Ukraine, deserves attention. The researcher also proposed an original classification of the functioning models of the institution of the Ombudsman for Children in various countries.

Urszula Michalik-Marcinkowska and Paweł Izdebski took up an extremely topical topic, often causing a lot of controversy among the public, regarding the inappropriate allocation of financial resources in health care. The authors discuss the functioning of the Polish health care system, together with the sources of its financing. They focused on wasting funds, wrong decisions, and defective solutions in the field of health insurance.

The article by Marcin Skinder draws the readers' attention to the legal issues related to the employment of migrants and the protection of their health. It identifies the problems of employment and health protection of migrant workers, along with limitations and difficulties in accessing the health care system and preventive examinations of foreign workers.

An interesting approach to the subject of otherness in general education was undertaken by Agnieszka Piejka in her work. The author rightly notices that the role of education is to prepare a person for life and meeting otherness: cultural, religious, gender identity, age, disease and disability. The educational process should develop a responsible perception of the Other in a person.

Marcin Płoski, on the other hand, prepared a review of the publication Organizing trade unions in Europe: research and practice edited by Jan Czarzasty and Adam Mrozowicki.

I hope that you will learn with interest the results of our authors' research, and perhaps they will become a starting point for your own reflections.

I invite authors from various scientific environments and representing various disciplines of knowledge, in which the human is at the center, to co-create "Society and Politics". I encourage you to submit reviews of new books, especially those published in the congress languages.
